
A $3.5B fund just gave "emerging global AI" its own category. The name is the signal, not the dollar figure.

Categories lag reality by a year or more. By the time a taxonomy names it, the deals that proved the thesis already happened.

Being early stops being the moat.
Being positioned inside the right
corridor becomes the differentiator.

Most capital is chasing Southeast Asia and the Gulf right now, simply because that's where the visible deal flow already is.

The real diligence question isn't
"does this founder speak English."
It's who has run more than one cycle
in this corridor.

Korea through Japan into North America:
dense talent, working capital markets, a trust gap most funds outsource to the wrong person. Full breakdown in the comments.
